My Fictional Truth story is about deja vu or like parallel universes that you experienced this before in your dreams or in real life and all of the sudden it's like your imagination is playing tricks on you. There's a part where you felt like you dreamed about where you went to this place before and then you met this person but in reality, you never met this person in your entire life. All of sudden you woke up and you went to a place that is similar to your dreams and then you felt this gut or mind telling you, it's gonna happen or you're gonna experience it and then this person comes to you and said "hello! How are you?". It's interesting because I love listening to theories or predictions of what's happening or how scientists find out about deja vu or some sorts of alternate universes. Whether there's another version of you out there in other universes or some way of reliving these memories when the other you could be experiencing this already.

The Organization I believe is either someone trying to play with your trick minds or something evil demon, spirit or some sort of alien out there trying to mess up your mind and making you think it's all just a dream. It's because if there is something out in other universes or other humans out there trying to mess this earth, I believe it is real and deja vu can mostly happen to us, not just me but for everyone in general. It's also said that it's a leftover memory from past bleeding through your current life. What I believe we have when we go to sleep is dream catchers and basically it's a small hoop containing a horsehair mesh, or a similar construction of string or yarn, decorated with feathers and beads, believed to give its owner good dreams. Dreamcatchers were originally made by North American Indians. This might help when you experience bad dreams and can protect you from preventing anything that comes your way. If you, like a person are experiencing anything deja vu or some sort of bad feeling you have that there might be another person out there doing similar things in your universe, you might have experienced this before in your dreams and you can use dream catchers to protect yourself and bad dreams. The belief is that the dreamcatcher's web catches bad dreams while allowing good dreams to pass through.

For the benevolent truth, I want people to know that deja vu and parallel universe are real because it's a glitch that we experience this before and we want to know the history why us or if something is trying to play our minds whether it's like witchcraft, demon, spirit or some type alien creature. Because sometimes it happens to most people who experienced this before and want to feel different afterwards. When I experienced this before I was a kid, I felt like there was something eerie or creepy going around my life or something. It's telling me the future holds for me. Also when I had bad dreams before, it felt very scary and worst for my friends and families because they were there and almost the place looked different compared to real life. I want people to know that this is not just hoax or myth stories, no it's actually deep and something mindful and true to people out there who experienced deja vu and parallel universe glitch. Even if it did not happen to you or you never feel like you experienced this before, Just know it's true and things can happen sooner or later.
